Dear [addressee name],

There has been concern that the number of young women attending for their cervical screening test is falling. Our team is trying to find ways of encouraging more young women to attend. We appreciate that some women have made a deliberate choice not to attend but we believe that for others there may be a number of reasons. These include anxiety and some unknowns, which could be helped by being able to talk to a trained nurse who could talk to you about it.

We have a trained nurse who can be contacted, and her details are below. Should you choose not to contact the trained nurse you can of course attend for your screening test with your GP who have trained sample takers.

Yours sincerely,

Professor Henry C Kitchener
Chief Investigator & Consultant Gynaecologist
